Missouri Prepares for Real ID Implementation

Starting in January 2018, current Missouri licenses no longer will be accepted as an ID when boarding a domestic airline flight at an airport.

Missouri is one of several states that don't comply or have an extension to comply with the Real ID Act. The law is intended to tighten standards for IDs accepted by the federal government for "official purposes," as defined by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. The law includes requirements about how long source documents, used to obtain an ID, must be retained and prohibitions on the uses of non-compliant forms of ID.

Already, current Missouri driver's licenses cannot be used as a form of ID when entering most military installations; Missouri visitors are required to have a passport or other federal ID. Starting in January 2018, current licenses no longer will be accepted as an ID when boarding a domestic airline flight at an airport.

The Missouri Senate voted 28-5, on 7/26/17, in favor of giving Missouri residents the option to get state driver's licenses and identification cards that either comply or don't comply with the federal law. The legislation now heads to the House. If approved by the House, the bill will head to Governor Eric Greitens, who has said he supports giving Missouri residents options that will allow them access to air travel and military bases.
