Honeymoon

As your wedding approaches, you may be asking yourselves, why have a honeymoon at all? What is a honeymoon for?

When you think about it, a honeymoon is expensive, it takes you away from your "real" life, and it involves planning — when you may already feel overwhelmed by wedding details. No wonder that some couples decide not to have a honeymoon, or at least to delay theirs.

Yet there are valid and compelling reasons to organize a honeymoon and schedule it as close to your wedding as possible. These are some of the best reasons to have a honeymoon:

To Relax. Even the most modest weddings can be stressful and tiring for both the bride and groom. And if you're like most couples, you'll spend more time with your guests than your new spouse at your wedding. A honeymoon is your opportunity to finally relax alone together.

To Celebrate. You're married! At last! After all the time, thought, and cash devoted to the big party, give yourselves private moments to kick back and celebrate your new status as an official couple.

To Adjust. Even if you don't opt for a name change, it still may take a little time to get used to having the world see you as a couple.

To Make Love. Okay, you don't need to pack a suitcase to do this. But on a honeymoon you can make love for hours undisturbed. Doing so in a beautiful setting away from home fosters intimacy, a cornerstone of a strong marriage.

To Be Pampered. A honeymoon is for experiencing bliss. Are you spa fans, or want to try a treatment for the first time? Either way, consider getting side-by-side massages (if your honeymoon in the tropics, you may be able to request massages in a shaded, private outdoor area). You're likely to return home relaxed and glowing.

To Explore. A honeymoon sends a couple out into the world together, and it's one of life's joys to experience new places together.

To Plan for the Future. A honeymoon gives a couple quiet time to imagine their future. Do you want children or are you complete being a twosome? What kind of family do you envision? Where do you want to be in five years? Ten? Twenty? More than sweet nothings are whispered on long honeymoon strolls on the beach and during candlelight dinners.
