Jane's Travel Tips

Always pack a hat. In the winter, a knit hat will keep you warm and take up little room. In the summer, a brimmed hat will keep the sun off your face. In either case, it will save you when your straightening iron doesn't work in the trapezoidal electrical socket you found in your hotel room.

River Cruising

A river cruise is a wonderful way to relax, watch the world drift by at a leisurely pace and explore the towns, cities and countryside of the US, Europe and exotic destinations around the globe.

Whether you're in the U.S., Europe, South America, Asia, or Africa, river cruising shares similarities -- along with plenty of dissimilarities - - from ocean cruising. The first point is that ships are much smaller than ocean vessels, particularly in Europe, where they are restricted in width and length to fit into locks and sail beneath low bridges, and parts of Asia where they have to navigate shallow waters.

You can find North America river cruises from March to December, but sail dates and seasons will vary, depending on the particular river you'd like to sail. Christmas market cruises along the Lower Mississippi began in 2015. In Europe the cruise season begins in early spring (typically in late March) and runs through late fall (the best time for value-seekers). Cruise lines keep a handful of ships available for the holiday markets season (late November through New Year's Day) on the Rhine and Danube.
