In the early hours of Friday morning, August 31st 1888, a penniless prostitute was slaughtered in Bucks Row, Whitechapel. Her name was Mary Ann Nichols. Her throat was severed deeply by two cuts, but it wasn't until her body was taken to the mortuary that it was discovered that the lower part of the abdomen was partly ripped open by a deep, jagged wound.

With the death of this one woman began a reign of terror so horrifying that the world still remembers, it conjures up images of a bygone time, of gaslit streets, fog ridden alleys and a hunt for a demon whose legend still lingers around the East end today...JACK THE RIPPER.

This fall marks the 125th anniversary of the Whitechapel murders, carried out by Jack the Ripper, perhaps the world's most infamous serial killer. So many years later, interest in the Ripper endures. It's probably the greatest whodunit in the history of crime.
